NOMADS OF THE OURWOOD BY

A Story of the Woods, in Which the Adventures of a Pup and a Bear Cub Are Entwined About the Romance of a Man and a Beautiful Girl

Copyright, 1919, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

CHAPTER L. WAS late in the month of March, at the dying-out of the Eagle Moon, that Neewa the black bear cub got his first real took at the world. Noozak, his mother, was an old bear, and like an old person she was filled with rheumatics and the desire to sleep late. So instead of taking a short and ordinary map of three months this particular winter of little Neewa's birth she slept four, which made Neewa, who was born while his mother was sound asleep, a little over two months old instead of six weeks when they came out of the den. two weeks after this Noozak remained near the ridge and the Then came the day, when Neews was eleven weeks old, that she turned her nose toward the distant black forests and began the summer's peregrination. Neewa's feet had lost their tenderness, and he weighed a good six pounds. This was pretty good considering that he had only weighed twelve ounces at birth.

As the days progressed, and living things began to crawl out from under logs and rocks. Neewa discovered the thrill and excitement of hunting on his own account. He encountered a second beetle, and killed it. He killed his first wood-mouse. Swiftly there were developing in him the instants of Soominitik, his scrap-loving old father, who lived three or four valleys to the north of their own, and who never missed an opportunity to get into a fight. At four months of age, which was late in May, Noewa was eating many things that would have diffled most cubs of his age, and there wasn't a yellow streak in him from the tip of his saucy little nose to the end of his stubby tail. He weighed nine pounds at this date and was as black as a tar-baby.

He began to whistle as be turned sighed twelve ounces at birth.

At was early in June that the exciting event occurred which brought about the big change in Neewa's life.

It was early in the evening that the first of a thin fringe of balsams a hundred yards away.

Neewa and his mother lay down in Close at his heels followed Miki.

It was this day, just as the sun was a tin pall, and on the other, eying him with the keenest interest, one of the homeliest and yet one of the most companionable-looking dog pups ever born of a Mackenzie hound father and a mother half Airedale and father and a mother half Airedale and half Spits.

With this tragedy of blood in his veins nothing in the world could have made the pup anything more than "just dog." His tail, stretched out straight on the sand, was long and lean, with a knot at every joint; his paws, like an overgrowa boy's feet, looked like small boxing gloves; his head was three sizes too big for his body, and accident had assisted Nature in the perfection of her masterpiece by robbing him of a half of one of his cars. As he watched his master triks half of an ear stood up like a galvanised stub, while the other twice as long was perked forward in the deepest and most interested ingerry. Head, feet and tail were machinais hound, but the cars and his lank, skinny body was a battle royal between Spits and Airedale. At his present inharmonious stage of development he was the dogstest dog-pup of a mid a pot were brewing with Miki at his heels, and close to the beat was a battered and mended reflector in which a bannock of flour and water was beginning to brown. In one of the pots was coffee, in the other a boiling fish.

It was in the gray light of the carly summer dawn when Challoner rekindled the fire. Miki followed a few moments later, and his master fastened and tied the rope to a sapling. Another rope of similar length Challoner, tied to the corners of a grub sack so that it could be carried over his shoulder like a game bag. With the first rose-flush of the sun he was ready for the trail of Neewa and his mother. Miki set up a melank, skinny body was a battle royal booked back the pup was tugging and somersaulting at the end of his rope like a jumping-jack. For a quarter of a mile up the creek he could hear Neewa and his mother lay down in the edge of a grassy knoll to sleep after their day's feasting. Noozak panter their day's feasting. Noozak panted factor of the Great Hudson Hay Company, had pitched his camp in all that part of the northland. Food was no problem for her. In the creek, mouth of the creek. There was not penned up in the pools, were unlimited quantities of it, and she had encountered no other bear to challenge her possession. It was this day, just as the sun was setting, that a man on his hands and knees was examining a damp patch of sand five or six miles down the creek. His sleeves were rolled up, the rough edge of the world. And having his brown arms halfway to the shoulders and he wore no hat, so that the evening breeze ruffled a ragged head of blond hair that for a matter of eight or nine months had been cut with a hunting knife.

Close on one side of this individual was a tin pail, and on the other, eying him with the keenest interest, color of rusty char, and his grub spoken volumes to a man with an color of rusty char, and his grub sacks were next to empty.

Over a small firs the contents of a pan and a pot were brewing when he returned with Miki at his heels, and close to the heat was a battered and content of the content of between Spitz and Airedale. At his present inharmonious stage of development he was the dogstest dog-pup cutside the alleys of a big city.

For the first time in several minutes his master spoke, and Miki wig-

WAS THAT ILL-JOINTED, LOP-E ARED OFFSPRING OF THE MAN-BEAST AN ENEMY TOO?

day was not a matter of personal pleasure, nor was it inspired alons by his deaire to possess a cub along with Mikh. He needed meat, and bear pork thus early in the season will be resected by the season will be resected as supply of the life channels and where the creek split itself into a wide bear pork thus early in the season will be resected as supply of the life channels and where the creek split itself into a wide bear pork thus early in the season will be resected as supply of the life channels and where the creek split itself into a whore were noming about lazily for he has severed in the rest of the war down to the like the plant of were noming about lazily for the life the split into a wide the saved all the rest of the war down to the like the plant of were noming about lazily for the like the plant of were noming about lazily for the like the plant of were noming about lazily for the like the plant of were noming about lazily for the like the plant of were noming about lazily for the wind. In this moment, too, Neews accumed the wind, the whispers that came out they had returned vesterday to feast on the "tipened" catch. Chalipper the wind, the whispers that came out they had returned vesterday to feast on the "tipened" catch. Chalipper was eisted. He was sure that he would find the pair along the creek and into a white had a move than all else the low, grunting that was almost like now that he will the pair along the creek and into a white had almost for the wind. In this moment, too, Neews accumed the wind. In th marking every sound and movement smell of man!

a wild whoof in her voice that was that at last she had come to the utanead of him, and wetting his finger instantly she was turned into rook. new to him—a warning for him to termost end of her trail. With twenty years of life being the shoulder which had come, years bear matter of human cunning. Every-fore, with that same smell of the one the comradeship and love of a child, stopped Neewa close to a thick cedar, and as she had done many times the fore she commanded him to climb it. Just once her hot tengue touched his face in a final carest. Then she turned to fight her last great fight.

Straight into the face of Challborr she dragged herself, and fifty feet from the spruce she stopped and waited for him, her head drooped between 1 r shoulders, her cides heaving, her eyes dimming more and more, until at last she mank down with a great sigh, barring the trail of their enemy.

orotch of the spruce Neews looked down on the first great tragedy of his life, and the admade him cringe deeper into his refuga and his little heart was near breakwith the terror that had selsed upon him. He-did not reason. It was by no miracle of mental process that he knew something terrible had happened, and that this tall, two-legged reature was the cause of it. His little eyes were blazing just over the level of the cnotch. He wondered nght when this new enemy came, Frightened as he was, he was ready to snari if she would only wake uploner bent over her. She was stone dead.

Challoner's face was flushed with exultation. Necessity had made of him a killer. He saw in Noosak a splendid pelt, and a provision of mean that would carry him all the rest of the way to the southland. He leaned his rifle against a tree and began looking about for the cub. Knowl-ledge of the wild told him it would not be far from its mother, and he began looking into the trees and the nearby thickets.

In the shelter of his crotch, screened by the thick branches, Neewa made himself as small as possible during the search. At the end of half an hour Challoner disappointedly gave up his quest and went back to the creek for a drink before setting himself to the task of skinning Noosak.

failed to bear him he crept around with the wind and stole up behind. He was within a dosen feet of Neswa before the cub suspected danger. Then it was too late. In a swift rush Challoner was upon him and, before Neswa could leave the back of his mother, had smothered him in the folds of the grub sack.

In all his life Challoner had never experienced a liveller five minutes.

In all his life Challener had never experienced a livelier five minutes than the five that followed. Above Newa's grief and his fear there rose the savege fighting blood of old Soominitist, his father. He claused and bit and kicked and snarled. In those five minutes he was five Mile devils all rolled into one, and by the time Challener had the rope fustened about Neewa's neck and his fat body chucked into the sack his hands were scratched and lacerated in a score of places.

places.

In the sack Neewa continued to fight until he was exhausted, while Challoner skinned Noosak and cut from her the meat and fats which he wanted. The beauty of Noosak's peit brought a glow into his eyes. In it he rolled the meat and fats, and with behiche thong bound the whole into a pack around which he bested the dunnage ends of his shoulder straps. Weighted under the burden of sixty pounds of peit and meat, he picked up his rifle—and Neewa. It had been early afternoon when he left. It was almost sunset when he reached camp. Every foot of the way, until the last half-mile, Neewa fought like a spartan.

ready to hurry down the tree and help her. But not a muscle of Noomak's huge body moved as Challoner bent over her. She was stone dead.

Challoner's face was flushed with exultation. Necessity had made of him a killer. He saw in Noomak a splendid pelt, and a provision of mest that would carry him all the rest of the way to the southland. He leaned his rifle against a tree and began looking about for the cub. Knowledge of the wild told him it would ont be far from its mother, and he afternoon. "You-you plucky devil!" He tied the end of Neowate ledge of the wild told him it would not be far from its mother, and he began looking into the trees and the nearby thickets.

In the shelter of his crotch, at the end of Neewes rope heard by the fhick branches, Neewa made himself as small as possible during the search. At the end of his relied Neews out on the ground, and stepped hack. In that hour challener disappointedly gave up his quest and went back to the creek for a drink before setting himself to the task of skinning Noozak.

No sooner was he gone than Neewa's little head shot up alertly. For a few moments he watched, and then slipped backward down the trunk of the cedar to the ground. Challener heard him cry as he came back, and something seemed to grip hold of his heart suddenly and choke him. He had heard children crying like that; and it was the motheriess cub!

Creeping up behind a dwarf spruce he looked where Noozak lay dead, and saw Neewa perched on his mother's back. He had killed many things in his time, for it was his business to kill, and to barter in the pelts of creatures that others killed. But he had seen mothing like this before, and he felt all at once as if he had done murder.

"Tm sorry," he breathed softy, "you poor little devil; I'm sorry!"

He tied the end of Neewes such chair the sapping, and began casificusty to open the grub back. Then he steed he end of his the two saws willing to accept a trace so far as Challoner was concerned. Neewa was willing to accept a trace so far as Challoner was concerned. Neewa it was not Challoner the was not Challoner the was not Challoner the was not Challoner was concerned. Neewa it was not Challoner the was not Challoner was concerned. Neewa it was not Challoner the was not challed nor his bag. It was hilf! his was not Challoner the was not chall his two so of the search of spring of him?

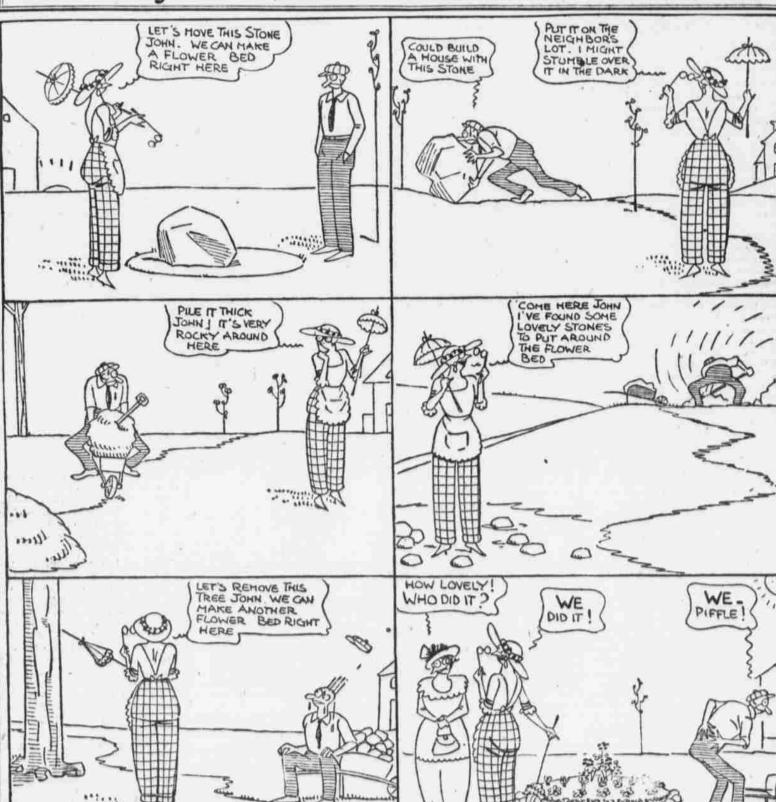

Neewa's little eyes gared. Was that ill-jointed lop-cared offspring of the members body and the chablike wing of his tail an invitation to fight? He judged so. Anyway, here was something of him?

Neewa's littl

The Day of Rest

Copyright, 1949, by The Pross Publishing Co. (The New York Evening World.)

· By Maurice Ketten

Original Dress Designs For the Smart Woman

By Mildred Lodewick Copyright, 1919, by The Press Publishing Co. (The New York Svening World).

An Appealing Alliance of Lace and Chiffon.

LITTLE frock that could make its welcome felt in any woman's wardrobe this summer is the pretty model shown to-day. It possesses that rare combination of qualities, dressiness, and practicality. The dreasiness is achieved through the delightful medium of soft thread-run lace and chiffon, while practicality is achieved through the severs lines and long-sleeved style. The woman of limited means will appreciate these combined features in gown, and also will she like in this one the simple style which makes copying so easy. There are no small and fussy pieces either to cut or keep track of, the main portions of the fronk being all, with the trimming quality supplied by the contrast of fabrics. The chiffon may be in some delionte color such as orchid or apple green, or lime yellow, which would bring out the plainer the destinctive lines. In the front the bodics parts away from the nock to show a front section of the lace and the skirt honors its good judgment by opening its tunic the same distance in front to reveal the lace foundation. This lace portion should be lined with thin white or flesh pink China silk. The sleeves are so wide at the base that they blow about the arm, being confined nevertheless at the edge. They may be kimeno style or set into the armhole, but the set-in miceve always sets better and is more comfortable. I have suggested a tiny plaiting as a finish for the neck, though the matron who would choose it may employ a mere cord covered with the chiffon, or a bias chiffon fold. The little ribbon bow matching in color, but of a little deeper shade, is the telling note of definition to the costume. Deep lace and the same color georgette or indestructible voile is a practical suggestion for this design.

THIS DESIGN PORTRAYS A WELCOME FROCK FOR A LIMITED WARDROBE.

Glimpses Into New York Shops.

date. Simply draw in the fullness at the bottom with a band of satin to give it the narrow at the ankie effect. Such models are among the new offerings in the shops.

The new dress silks are beautiful in their soft tones. The absence of loud striking colors or patterns is noticeable.

Coin dots are prominent this season. Navy blue silks with dots the size of half a dollar are not at all bizarre. The discs are in soft tones of green, yellow and cerise edged with a white hair line circle. There are also exquisite voiles with the large coin dots hich seil at $1.55 a yard. Those in Women who object to a tanned skin black and white effects are particularly attractive. There is an interest of them the chamles speed is just the thing.

Blue and black serge with a deep mbroidered border in self or contrasting color are receiving attention. One pattern in all black has an eigh-One pattern in all sicks has a five teen inch border and soils at five dellars a yard. Another in black with a duil white border is exquisite and can be had at seven dollars a yard. These prices are not exorbinatint when one considers that it requires only one and a half yards of this manner. terial to make a dress.

A novelty in negligees are the strictly tailored models. They have absolutely no trimming and even though they are developed in striking yellow fabrics they seem to be finding favor with shoppers.

As is usual in the summer the new is per cent. of a total trade of more handkerchiefs show decided color than $1,606,000,000. Before the war effects. Plaids and stripes are prominent. The elaborately embroidered inent. The elaborately embroidered by Chinz's 400,000,000 handkerchief is passe. When em-represented by Chinz's 400,000,000 handkerchief is passe. When em-represented broldery is used at all it is in some consumers, anothrusive pattern and hems are

OU can easily bring your last their narrow borders of contrasting season's full pleated skirt up to harmonize with the color of the

Many of the new summer fronks in soft silk have the skirt made in horizontal tucks from waistline to hem and the bodice is perfectly plain with, perhaps, buttons at the side front closing and an oval neck line.

The new wash skirts show the usual line of tailored effects in linen, pop-in, pique and cotton bengaline, but there are pretty styles in the softer effects in voiles, dimity and or-gandy that are interesting discerning

The chamols suede gloves are so pretty and well made this season that they are strong rivals of the silk glove as leaders in summer fashions. Women who object to a tanned skin

Blown by Trade Winds. APAN'S exports to China increased more than 400 per cent between 1913 and 1917. The 1913 figures were $77,830,000; by 1917 they had jumped to $318,380,000. Belgium before the Great War occupied fifth place among the great world powers in the commerce of the world. Russia and Italy, with their great populations, stood lower down in the list of commercial countries. The trade of the United States with the Far East last year represented As is usual in the summer the new 18 per cent, of a total trade of more

The new parasols are out and it is mercury to Germany as raw materill serve as protection against either the sun or rain are in special deand and they look very chic with